Federal Direct Parent PLUS Loan

The Direct Parent PLUS Loan is a federal loan offered to the parents of dependent students to assist them in paying for their college education. To qualify for this loan, a student must submit a valid FAFSA and parents must complete a separate credit check application at http://www.studentloans.gov. Parents need to re-apply each academic year.

What are the costs to borrow? The interest rate for the 2015-2016 academic year is fixed at 6.84%. There is also a loan origination fee of 4.292% of the principal. This origination fee will be applied before the loan money disburses to the school. (Ex. If you borrow $1000, then $957.08 will disburse to the school).

How much should I borrow? Unless you specify otherwise, the PLUS will be ONE loan with TWO disbursements (Fall & Spring). View your fall bill to determine how much needed to cover the student’s charges, then double that amount (if you’d like to provide cushion and cover the fee, you would add a little more). (Ex. If you need $5000 for fall, then you can apply for roughly $10,500. After the origination fees you will get about $5000 for fall & $5000 for spring).

When will my loan pay out? Loans with completed requirements typically disburse starting the first week of classes. Any excess funds will refunded back to the parent in form of a check (unless the parent designates the refund to be awarded to the student, in which case the refund will be awarded to student through their HigherOne preference).

Want to defer your re-payment?

You can request deferment when applying for the Direct Parent PLUS Loan. Simply check the box that you want to defer the payments until 6 months after student ceases to be enrolled at least half-time. Otherwise, repayment on the PLUS loan will begin 60 days after the loan is fully disbursed for the academic year.

Remember, interest accrues on the Parent PLUS Loan during the deferment period. Therefore, we recommend that you make your interest payments during this deferment period if at all possible.
