Inauguration Sets Tone for Delhi’s Future

Dreaming with Eyes Wide Open

President Michael Laliberte is daring to dream what SUNY Delhi can accomplish. And he’s putting students first.

In his inaugural address, President Laliberte explained how his collegiate experience helped him become a passionate leader and “champion of education.” As a first-generation student he faced many obstacles, but was fortunate to find the support he needed to succeed. He learned that “education plays a critical role in helping people find themselves” and dedicated himself “to serving the academy and challenging the system to ensure that all students were provided the opportunity to dream and discover.”

Cindy Shinohara, an Events Management major from Queens says, “President Laliberte always thinks about the students first, and that’s something we really need. As students, we are deciding what we want to learn, what we want to be in the future, so having our opinions heard should be prioritized.”

The inauguration capped a series of celebrations that put Delhi alumni, faculty, staff and students in the limelight. At an ice cream “social,” he posed for Instagram photos with the campus community. A game show pitted him against students in a friendly battle of wits over Delhi trivia. Legacy Day honored the Brooks, the nationally-known barbecue family who counts 11 relatives attending SUNY Delhi.

Pre-inauguration activities also recognized three “Delhi Heroes,” faculty and staff who quietly go about their work solely for the reward of making the college a better place. Al Dubreuil, Head Grounds Supervisor, who was honored as a “hero” expressed his confidence in President Laliberte. “I appreciate his leadership. I believe he’s going to be a great leader,” Dubreuil says.

Designing a new college seal was a priority for President Laliberte. He wanted a design that embodied the tenets he sees as the foundation of a Delhi education: scholarship, leadership and service. The new seal features three sprigs of laurel, symbolizing SUNY Delhi’s agricultural roots and representing each tenet. The seal was incorporated into the medallion worn by the president at inauguration, which will be worn at official ceremonies such as commencement. At inauguration, the seal was also featured on podiums and school banners, and each guest who attended the ceremony received an enamelled pin with the new seal.

President Laliberte demonstrated his commitment to students by inviting two seniors to emcee his inauguration. Christion Pettaway, an Architectural Design and Building major, and John Quagliano, a Business and Technology Management major, rose to the task with the ease of seasoned public speakers. “I know this has been said many times, but I find it to be very true—President Laliberte is a breath of fresh air on campus. He’s a very down-to-earth individual. I also agree that he’s very student-oriented, and he’s bringing about change that is very much needed. We all appreciate it,” says Pettaway.

Daring to dream about possibilities was the focus of President Laliberte’s closing remarks at inauguration. “We have to help our students realize their dreams,” he said. “We also have to give ourselves permission to dream our own dreams. We must not only dream our dreams, but act on them as well. Let us take the time to dream of our future. Let us imagine all of the great things that we can accomplish together. By working collaboratively we will attain goals that may have seemed impossible to attain.”

Students Learn Cybersecurity Skills

Students in a new cybersecurity course at Delhi are learning to combat unusual attacks.

In a custom-built lab funded by a $40,000 Perkins Grant, students test their skills by trying to hack into each other's computers to plant playful viruses—an attack of cat pictures, for example—or steal information. "I want to teach them how to hack because companies are never on the offensive; they're always on the defensive," Instructor Richard Celli says. "By teaching them the fundamentals of hacking, they know what can happen on the other side so they can defend against it."

Students also study ethics and legal practices in cybersecurity, how to assess vulnerabilities, risk management and incident response, cryptography, and encryption.

The college’s Computer Information Systems worked with faculty to obtain specialty hardware. A separate network for the hardware was installed that allows the coursework to be completely segmented from the campus network so that the lab does not interfere with the campus’ business connection.

The course had to be expanded to two semesters to accommodate demand. "Cybersecurity has become one of the hottest, if not the hottest, jobs out there today," Celli says. "It’s going to be the number one field over the next 10 to 15 years."

Best Online Hospitality Bachelor’s

SUNY Delhi’s online bachelor’s degree in Hospitality Management is one of the nation’s elite, according to a ranking of “Best Online Bachelor’s in Hospitality Management Programs for 2017” by Best Colleges.

The ranking cited the program's emphasis on managerial leadership, affordability, student support, and the integration of theory with practical application. The full list can be found at www.bestcolleges.com/features/top-online-hospitality-management-programs/.

When I came to Delhi I knew that I wanted to be involved with many different activities on campus. I applied to be a Resident Assistant (RA) and maintained my position for the past seven semesters. I also joined the women’s golf team as a first-year student and worked my way up to become the captain of the team. The time I’ve spent as an RA and playing on the women’s golf team has helped me become a well-rounded student leader and role model.

ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT

DANIEL D. WOODSIDE, AIA ’84

Major: AAS in Architectural Technology from SUNY Delhi; BArch from Syracuse University

Current residence: East Greenwich, NY

Current job: I am a licensed Architect and an Executive Principal at CSArch, an Albany-based Architecture/Engineering/Construction Management firm that was founded more than 25 years ago. We focus on creating inspiring spaces for colleges and universities, public and private pre-K-12 schools, corporate, and civic facilities. As a leader of the firm, I am responsible for business development, strategic planning, human resources and operations. My project responsibilities include conceptual planning, design, and quality control. Prior to working at CSArch, I worked as an architect for firms in Boston and Cincinnati.

Best part: Following high school as a wide-eyed graduate, I became a student at Delhi, where I began to pursue my passion for design/drawing and construction and kicked off a career in the field of architecture. Delhi provided me an excellent education that was rooted in a pragmatic approach to design and construction. My professors at Delhi encouraged me to transfer to Syracuse University and complete a professional BA degree in Architecture. The combination of the two degrees allowed me to become a well-rounded practicing architect and business leader.

Regrets: Not spending more time with students outside of architecture. You become very close with your classmates in your field, which is great because you develop life-long friendships by experiencing and overcoming similar challenges, but I wish I recognized at the time that people in other majors could eventually become clients. Tough to think this way as an 18- to 19-year-old kid, but I wish I did.

Ah-ha Moment: No matter how much time you put into a design project, you will always want to make it better and may simply not have the time. Project quality does not have to be sacrificed; instead it can be made even better by persevering, accepting quality criticism from professors and peers, and by striking a careful balance between hard work and social interaction.

Advice: Live in the moment, enjoy the college experience, absorb information like a sponge, sweat the details, research, draw, and look at the built world with a discerning eye and a sensitivity toward design projects that make a real difference on how people live, learn, and work.

Future Plans: Continue my passion as a dedicated life-long learner; co-lead our firm as we transition well beyond our original leadership; remain committed to the applied art of architecture by designing, drawing and building projects that people enjoy; strive to make a difference in a young person’s life, especially if they have an interest in pursuing a career in architecture.
William Young is celebrating the 10th Summer 2017 delhi.edu in the Campus Bookstore, made a Compassion for Pets program. Doc autographed copies when he was a student in Delhi’s world, returned to his alma mater on September 1963 and living in Sea Cliff, NY. He has two children and four grandchildren. They enjoy traveling to destinations such as Puerto Rico, Australia, New Zealand, Belize and St. Croix.

Henry Adams, Executive Vice President at Kiewit Infrastructure Group, recently hosted a group of SUNY Delhi Construction Technology students at the New York City Department of Environmental Protection’s Rondout-West Branch Tunnel Repair project, which Kiewit is spearheading in Newburgh, NY.

Donald Rabjohn established a family tradition when he graduated from SUNY Delhi in 1965. His son Mark followed, graduating with a degree in Architecture at SUNY Delhi — and he’s living in Murphy Hall, where Donald lived when the hall was first constructed. Donald has continuously demonstrated his gratitude for his alma mater by contributing to Delhi’s annual fund.

Former President Will Be Missed

The Delhi family mourns the loss of President Emeritus Seldon M. Kruger, who passed away February 22, 2017. His service as college president from 1979–1991 capped a distinguished academic and leadership career at SUNY Delhi that began as a faculty member in 1958. He also served as Chair, Dean, and Vice President for Academic Affairs before being named president.

President Kruger saw a need for change and led Delhi’s emergence as a college of technology that offered academic programs to meet changing workforce needs and support services to serve an increasingly diverse student body. Under his leadership the college strengthened industry support, expanded facilities and increased its philanthropic efforts, laying the foundation for the outstanding institution SUNY Delhi has become.

The Delhi Connection

Siyi Pu ’16 is living his dream thanks to a connection with a fellow SUNY Delhi alumnus.

Pu came to Delhi from China, where his family is in the hotel business. He completed his bachelor’s degree in Hotel and Resort Management last year and wanted to establish himself in the hotel industry in Texas.

That’s where the Alumni Association and Steve Levine ’71 came in. Pu met Lucinda Brydon, Director of Alumni Relations and Annual Giving, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees, who reached out to Levine, Executive Publisher of H.U.G.E., a health and wellness magazine for government employees.

The connection worked. Just seven days after graduating in December, Pu began an internship at The Woodlands Clarion Suites outside of Houston.
